Class Pictures

An activity introducing pupils in more depth to the power of photographs to convey identity.

What happens

1. Use the whiteboard to show Class Pictures by Dawoud Bey.
2. Ask the class to describe the portraits and what they reveal about each sitter, e.g.
  - How old they are
  - What they are wearing
  - What their body language suggests about how they are feeling
  - The emotions their expressions suggest
  - How the messages in the portrait might be different if the individuals were in one group portrait
3. Demonstrate how to make an envelope as per the online link.
4. Ask pupils to make their own envelopes, using the sugar paper.
5. Tell pupils they are each going to write a letter to the Tate Year 3 Project Team describing what's important to convey about their class, e.g. who's in it, what you're good at as a class, your class values, what you like about your school, your part of London, your hopes for the future.
6. Pupils insert their letters in their envelopes and write their names on the back. Post the letters to:

Tate Year 3 Project Team
A New Direction
50 Worship Street
London EC2A 2EA

Reflection questions

- Why does it matter how you look, stand and dress in a portrait?
- Why is a portrait of you on your own different from one of you in a group?
- Why is it important to express yourself?
- How might the artist Steve McQueen's epic group portrait of Year 3 children help visitors to understand you and your class?
